NEW HYBRID TEA ROSES
and Miscellaneous Collection of Pot-Grown Roses for Garden Culture

READY FOR SHIPMENT AFTER MAY 1, 1916

UR collection of Roses is well established in pots, and can be transplanted out of pots without breaking the ball of earth or disturbing the roots. This is an advantage over planting Roses which have not been pot-grown and require a month or more to recover after transplanting.

To insure success, Roses require a sunny exposure and some shelter from the cold winds. The ground should be thoroughly spaded over and poor soil removed—replacing the old turf, and a liberal application of cow-manure thoroughly incorporated with the soil.

Tea Roses should be planted about 20 inches apart; Hardy Perpetuals about 30 inches—giving plenty of water when the planting is done, and occasionally during the summer months in torrid weather. Plants that are in a weakened condition on account of lack of nourishment at the roots, are more subject to attack by insects or other pests than those in vigorous growth.

Spraying with a mixture of arsenate of lead is one of the best remedies. A safe solution would be four ounces to six gallons of water.

Care should be taken that the under portion of the foliage receives a thorough spraying, as this is where the enemies of the Rose and other plants take refuge—viz. under the leaves. Do not wait until the disease is prevalent, but spray at the first appearance of the pests.

A solution of tobacco is also an excellent remedy.

If plants are attacked by mildew, sulphur dust applied to the foliage is a good remedy.
